Parents abruptly drop lawsuit over transgender student in suburban district

ELYSSA CHERNEY

Resolving a three-year legal battle, a group of parents and high school students have dropped an effort to restrict bathroom and locker room access for transgender pupils in the northwest suburbs.

U.S. District Judge Jorge Alonso approved the dismissal Monday, closing one chapter in a long-standing dispute that has pitted some students and parents against Palatine-based District 211, the state's largest high school district.

A separate lawsuit against District 211 by a transgender student who has since graduated — claiming its policies on locker room access were too restrictive — is still pending in state court.

The dismissal in the federal case means the policies at the center of the controversy, which allow transgender students to use facilities that correspond with their gender identity, will remain in place.

"The District will continue our practices of affirming and supporting the identity of our students with access to bathrooms and locker rooms," spokesman Tom Petersen said in a statement.

An attorney for the parents group suing the district did not fully explain why her clients dropped the case. In a statement issued Monday, attorney Christiana Holcomb of Arizona-based Alliance Defending Freedom noted that two transgender students who were allowed to use the girls' locker rooms when the lawsuit was initially filed in 2016 have since graduated. She also said her organization will continue to "actively monitor the situation."

"If new conflicts arise because the school district allows opposite-sex use of boys' or girls' privacy facilities, such as locker rooms, we will take appropriate legal action," she said.

Alliance Defending Freedom attorney Jeremy Tedesco, who represents parents from District 211, announced their intent to file a lawsuit against the federal government in 2016.

On the other side, attorneys at the American Civil Liberties Union of Illinois, who intervened in the case to represent transgender students, welcomed a long-awaited conclusion in the matter.

ACLU attorney John Knight said in a statement that District 211 still has long way to go to make school welcoming for all students, including those who are transgender.

"There has never been any harm to non-transgender students from sharing restrooms and locker rooms with students whom they perceive as different," he said. "The only harm has been to transgender students who have been targeted with fear-mongering and misinformation. Students who are transgender have never been a threat to anyone in this school or elsewhere."

Ed Yohnka, a spokesman for the ACLU, said Students and Parents for Privacy did not discuss their decision to ask for dismissal, and he could not speculate why they chose to end the lawsuit.

"This literally just dropped out of the sky," he said Monday.

In Palatine, the controversy over bathroom and locker room rights dates to at least 2013. That year, a District 211 student filed a complaint with the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights seeking full access to the girls' locker room. The student wanted to use the locker room that matched her gender identity, even though she was identified as male at birth.

In 2015, the department ruled the district was in violation of the Title IX law, which prohibits gender discrimination in education.

After District 211 implemented policies to bring it into compliance, the district constructed a private changing stall for the student. Students and Parents for Privacy filed its federal lawsuit in 2016 seeking an injunction to change the policy.

Students and Parents for Privacy argued that sharing bathrooms with transgender students caused "embarrassment, humiliation, anxiety, fear, apprehension, stress, degradation and loss of dignity," court records said.

In January 2018, Alonso ruled that he would not order the district to halt its bathroom policies.

Last week, the judge handed down another ruling that dismissed some claims sought by Students and Parents for Privacy. In a 25-page ruling, Alonso also dismissed the group's president, Vickie Wilson, from the lawsuit for lack of standing but allowed parts of the legal action to proceed.

While the federal case has wrapped up, the case before state court judges remains unresolved. In that matter, transgender student Nova Maday sued the district in 2017, saying the requirement to use a private changing stall was discriminatory. Maday, who is also represented by the ACLU, has said she should be allowed to change in the same space as her fellow female classmates. Her case reached the state Appellate Court in 2018 and was sent back to trial judges, where it is currently pending.

TOM SKILLING'S 3-DAY FORECAST

Strong, mid-April sunshine on Monday melted much of the snow cover left from our weekend storm. Early in the day, satellite imagery showed a swath of snow from west-central Illinois to western Michigan. Any residual snow will be gone by Tuesday morning, allowing southwest winds to usher much warmer air into the metro area. Afternoon readings are expected to approach the 70-degree mark before winds turn onshore. Mild air will dominate through midweek, with temperatures topping 70 through Thursday. As the flow of warmer air strengthens, showers and thunderstorms will become possible. Storms are most likely Wednesday night into Thursday. Much colder air is forecast to arrive Friday, but temps are expected to rebound to around 70 degrees on Easter Sunday.

U.S. Rep. Dan Lipinski, right, and Democratic primary challenger Marie Newman talk at a League of Women Voters candidate forum.

Newman wants a rematch with Lipinski in 2020 primary

DAN PETRELLA

La Grange businesswoman Marie Newman is seeking a rematch against eight-term U.S. Rep. Dan Lipinski in 2020 after giving him the toughest challenge of his political career in last year's Democratic primary.

Newman, 55, announced her candidacy Tuesday morning on Twitter.

"We deserve a representative who will vote like a real Democrat in Congress — not someone who routinely sides with (President Donald) Trump and conservative interest groups over his own constituents," Newman said in a tweet.

Lipinski, 52, a conservative Democrat from Western Springs who was first elected in 2004 to the seat long held by his father, garnered 51 percent of the vote in the 2018 primary to Newman's 49 percent. He easily won re-election in November, defeating Republican candidate Arthur J. Jones of Lyons, a Holocaust denier with neo-Nazi ties, in a district that stretches from the Southwest Side to the south and southwest suburbs.

"This isn't going to be easy," Newman said in a series of Twitter posts. "Machine politics. Deep-pocketed special interests. Conservative D.C. insiders. They're all lining up to shut us down before we can get started. They don't scare me."

Newman ended the first quarter of the year with more than $181,000 in her campaign fund and nearly $161,000 in outstanding debts, according to federal campaign finance records.

Lipinski ended last year with more than $450,000 in his campaign fund. Figures for the first quarter of 2019 aren't yet available from the Federal Election Commission.

Newman's announcement came a day after a lawyer and political newcomer from Bridgeport entered the race. Abe Matthew, 32, made the announcement in a one-minute video posted on Twitter.

"I'm running to be an advocate for working families," Matthew says in the video. "I'm running to be an advocate for women. I'm running to be an advocate for immigrants. I'm running to be your advocate."

Matthew, a graduate of Marquette University and John Marshall Law School, is a personal injury attorney and partner in the firm Matthew & Drnovsek Law. He and his wife, Shannon, have two sons: Atticus, 3, and Lincoln, 1.

"When my two little boys were born, I realized I wasn't a young man anymore and couldn't wait for the future to be better," Matthew said in an interview. "We need to make the future better."

Matthew, who said he voted for Newman in 2018, has never run for office. Last year he donated $400 to the campaign fund of Aaron Goldstein, a Democratic candidate for Illinois attorney general, according to state campaign finance records. Nov. 25 is the first day for candidates to file nominating petitions with the Illinois State Board of Elections for the March 17 primary.

Lightfoot donates money that has tie to Ald. Burke

JOHN BYRNE

Mayor-elect Lori Lightfoot has donated $500 after her campaign received the same amount from a developer indicted last week on federal charges alleging he steered legal work to powerful Ald. Edward Burke in exchange for help at City Hall, according to a spokeswoman.

Lightfoot received $500 from businessman Charles Cui at a March fundraiser, Lightfoot spokeswoman Nadia Perl said. Now that Cui faces federal charges tying him to Burke, Lightfoot gave that amount to Reform For Illinois rather than keep money tied in any way to Burke, Perl said Tuesday.

Lightfoot is keen to avoid any connection to Burke. She used Burke's legal entanglements as a cudgel against several other mayoral candidates, including Cook County President Toni Preckwinkle, who Lightfoot beat handily in the April 2 runoff.

Burke was charged separately in January with leaning on Texas-based executives to hire his law firm in exchange for help with permits needed to renovate a Burger King at 41st Street and Pulaski Road in his Southwest Side Ward. Prosecutors also alleged that Burke pressured one of the executives to contribute $10,000 to the campaign of an unnamed local politician. Sources told the Tribune the politician was Preckwinkle.

Lightfoot subsequently positioned herself as the antidote to the insider style of politics she said Preckwinkle and others practiced.

Burke, who has denied wrongdoing, won re-election to a 13th term in February.

Red Line back to normal after mechanical problem

CTA Red Line trains resumed normal service after being rerouted Tuesday afternoon from the State Street subway following a mechanical issue that stopped a train at the line's Jackson Street station, authorities said.

Trains were rerouted from the subway to elevated tracks starting about 12:20 p.m., said Irene Ferradaz, a CTA spokeswoman. She did not have details about the problem.

Subway service resumed shortly after, according to the CTA.

Trains were congested and operating with delays, the CTA said.

Attorney General William Barr's initial summary of the special counsel's report set the stage for Thursday's anticipated release.

Trump tweets complaints ahead of redacted report

BY MICHAEL BALSAMO
AND JONATHAN LEMIRE
Associated Press

The president isn't waiting. As Washington counts down the final hours until publication of the redacted special counsel report — now expected Thursday — Donald Trump stepped up his attacks in an effort to undermine potential disclosures on Russia, his 2016 campaign and the aftermath.

He unleashed a series of tweets Monday focusing on the previously released summary of special counsel Robert Mueller's conclusions — including a crucial one on obstruction of justice that Trump again misrepresented — produced by Attorney General William Barr.

"Mueller, and the A.G. based on Mueller findings (and great intelligence), have already ruled No Collusion, No Obstruction," Trump tweeted. "These were crimes committed by Crooked Hillary, the DNC, Dirty Cops and others! INVESTIGATE THE INVESTIGATORS!"

Press secretary Sarah Sanders repeatedly tried to make the same case on TV talk shows on Sunday. But the political battle is far from finished over the special counsel's investigation of Russian efforts to help Trump in 2016 and whether there was cooperation with his campaign.

Democrats are calling for Mueller himself to testify before Congress and have expressed concern that Barr will order unnecessary censoring of the report to protect the president. The House Judiciary Committee, led by Rep. Jerry Nadler of New York, is poised to try to compel Barr to turn over an unredacted copy as well as the report's underlying investigative files.

The Justice Department announced Monday that it expects to release the redacted version Thursday morning, sending the findings of the nearly two-year probe to Congress and making them available to the public.

Mueller officially concluded his investigation late last month and submitted the confidential report to Barr. Two days later, the attorney general sent Congress a four-page letter that detailed Mueller's "principal conclusions."

In his letter, Barr said the special counsel did not find a criminal conspiracy between Russia and Trump associates during the campaign. However, contrary to Trump's false claim, Mueller did not reach a conclusion on whether Trump obstructed justice. Instead, Mueller presented evidence on both sides of that question. Barr said he did not believe the evidence was sufficient to prove that Trump had obstructed justice, but he noted that Mueller's team did not exonerate the president.

Portions of the report being released by the Justice Department will be redacted to protect grand jury material, sensitive intelligence, matters that could affect ongoing investigations and damage to the privacy rights of third parties, the attorney general has said.

The scores of outstanding questions about the investigation have not stopped the president and his allies from declaring victory.

Google backs off Chicago retail flagship

Google has backed off plans to open its first retail flagship store in a Fulton Market district property.

The company last year was in advanced negotiations to open a store in a two-story, 14,000-square-foot space in connected brick buildings at 845 to 853 W. Randolph St., the Tribune reported in August, citing people familiar with the deal.

RYAN ORI
On Real Estate

But Google has walked away from the deal, and the space is now being marketed to other potential tenants by Chicago-based property owner Newcastle Ltd., according to real estate sources.

It's unclear why Mountain View, Calif.-based Google halted plans late in the leasing process, or whether a store could wind up elsewhere in Chicago or another city.

"We don't comment on rumor or speculation," spokeswoman Kayla Conti said.

One location apparently not under consideration for a store is Google's nearby Midwest headquarters building, 1K Fulton.

Last year, Google confirmed it was leasing additional space on the ground floor of the former cold storage building at 1000 W. Fulton. The company plans to use that space to train clients that use the company's cloud services, Conti said.

Google has been rumored for years to be considering stores to sell hardware such as tablets, smartphones and Google Home—the company's version of Amazon Echo.

So far, though, Google has only opened short-term pop-up stores such as one that was open on North Damen Avenue in Bucktown at the end of 2018. Other pop-ups were in New York and London.

Newcastle's space at Randolph and Peoria streets is expected to get a boost from nearby hotels bringing foot traffic to the area, including the Soho House, the recently opened Hoxton and the Nobu hotel and restaurant expected to open this summer. Nobu is in the final stages of construction directly across the street.

"That core customer is so affluent," broker Greg Kirsch, Cushman & Wakefield's head of Midwest retail, said of the hotels' impact on retail space in the neighborhood. "I'm a huge believer in that area."

Kirsch is not involved in Google's deal or Newcastle's leasing efforts.

Newcastle president and CEO Michael Haney could not immediately be reached for comment.

Macron vows Notre Dame rebuild

Officials say a frantic rescue effort saved its most precious treasures

Associated Press

PARIS (AP) — The inferno that raged through Notre Dame Cathedral for more than 12 hours destroyed its spire and its roof but spared its twin medieval bell towers, and a frantic rescue effort saved the monument's "most precious treasures," including the Crown of Thorns purportedly worn by Jesus, officials said Tuesday.

French President Emmanuel Macron pledged to rebuild the beloved Roman Catholic architectural landmark, and wanted to see it completed within five years.

"We have so much to rebuild," Macron said in a televised address to the nation. "We will rebuild Notre Dame Cathedral even more beautifully. We can do it, and once again, we will mobilize (to do so)."

Authorities consider the fire an accident, possibly as a result of restoration work at the global architectural treasure that survived almost 900 years of tumultuous French history but was devastated in the blaze on the second day of Holy Week.

Paris prosecutor Remy Heitz said the inquiry into the fire would be "long and complex." Fifty investigators were working on it and would interview workers from five companies hired for the renovations to the cathedral's roof, where the flames first broke out.

Heitz said an initial fire alert was sounded at 6:20 p.m. Monday but no fire was found. The second alert was sounded at 6:43 p.m., and the blaze was discovered on the roof.

Investigators have already questioned nearly 30 people, said a Paris judicial police official, speaking on condition of anonymity in order to comment on an ongoing probe.

News that the fire was probably accidental has done nothing to ease the national mourning for the symbol of national pride immortalized in Victor Hugo's 1831 novel "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

"Notre Dame has survived the revolutionary history of France, and this happened during building works," said influential former Culture Minister Jack Lang.

Interior Minister Christophe Castaner said there were still some risks to the structure and that it was "under permanent surveillance because it can still budge."

A plan to safeguard the masterpieces and relics was quickly put into action after the fire broke out.

GETTY IMAGES

An interior view of the Notre-Dame Cathedral Tuesday in Paris shows the aftermath of a fire that devastated the cathedral.

Dame's most sacred relic, was among the treasures quickly transported after the fire broke out, said Deputy Mayor Emmanuel Gregoire. Brought to Paris by King Louis IX in the 13th century, it is purported to have been pressed onto Christ's head during the crucifixion. Also saved was the tunic of St. Louis, a long, shirt-like garment from the 13th century, said Culture Minister Franck Riester.

The cathedral's famous 18th century organ that boasts more than 8,000 pipes also survived.

"The works of art, the most precious treasures were secured last night," Riester told reporters, thanking teams from city hall, the culture ministry, firefighters and the bishopric who worked to save the items.

Some of the works were being transferred from City Hall to the Louvre, where they will be dehumidified, protected and eventually restored. The minister said the cathedral's greatest paintings would be removed starting Friday. "We assume they have not been damaged by the fire but there will eventually be damage from the smoke," he added.

The 3-meter-tall copper statues that looked over Paris from Notre Dame's 96-meter peak already had been removed from the roof days ago and sent to southwestern France as part of a 6 million-euro ($6.8 million) renovation on the spire and its 250 tons of lead.

Much was saved in the interior too. The only major work damaged inside was the cathedral's high altar, installed in 1989 under Cardinal Jean-Marie Lustiger. It was hit when the spire collapsed, said Laurent Prades, heritage director for Notre Dame.

"We have been able to salvage all the rest," said Prades, who watched the recovery overnight. "All the 18th century steles, the pietas, frescoes, chapels and the big organ are fine."

The three large stained-glass rose windows, among the most famous parts of the cathedral, were not destroyed, but might have been damaged by the heat and will be assessed by an expert, he added.

"The task is — now the risk of fire has been put aside — about the building, how the structure will resist," said Junior Interior Minister Laurent Nunez.

UNESCO Director-General Audrey Azoulay said work must begin immediately to protect the remaining structure.

The first 24-48 hours were crucial to protecting the stone and wood structure from water damage and assessing the next steps, she told The Associated Press, warning that parts of the cathedral remain "extremely fragile," notably hundreds of tons of scaffolding around the spire that collapsed. Notre Dame is part of a UNESCO heritage site and UNESCO has offered its expertise.

Pope Francis offered his prayers that Notre Dame, the "architectural gem of a collective memory," will once again be a shrine to the Catholic faith, a symbol of the French nation and a spiritual and architectural gift to humanity.

In a condolence note to Paris Archbishop Michel Aupetit, Francis said the fire was particularly devastating given that it came during the somber days leading up to Easter during which Christians commemorate the death and resurrection of Jesus.

Repairing the cathedral, including the 800-year-old wooden beams that made up its roof, presents challenges.

The roof cannot be rebuilt exactly as it was because "we don't, at the moment, have trees on our territory of the size that were cut in the 13th century," said Bertrand de Feydeau, vice president of preservation group Fondation du Patrimoine, adding the roof restoration work would have to use new technology.

Also of concern, Feydeau said, is the organ, "a very fragile instrument, especially its pipes."

"It has not burnt, but no one can tell whether it has been damaged by water. Nobody knows if it is a functioning state or will need to be restored," he told AP.

Madonna teases new music, alter ego

She's getting back into the groove.

After weeks of social media tease, Madonna announced on Instagram the name of her 14th studio album: "Madame X" — the first since the critically acclaimed "Rebel Heart," from 2015.

Then she revealed that the first single "Medellín" will release Wednesday. It's a collaboration between the legendary pop star and reggaeton superstar Maluma.

The Instagram post featured a photo of Madonna dressed in a white wedding gown, in bright red gloves and brighter red lips, with her arm wrapped around Maluma.

In a video, Madonna teased her new music.

"I've decided to call my album 'Madame X,'" she says in the minute-long video, in a subdued, almost demure manner. But as a snippet of her new music plays in the background, images that seem to pay homage to some of the most iconic moments of her nearly four-decade-long career ("Like a Virgin," "Erotica," "Rain," "Bad Girl") remind viewers of her ever-staying power.

"Madame X is a secret agent, traveling around the world, changing identities, fighting for freedom, bringing light to dark places," she says before revealing that Madame X is her new artistic persona. "A dancer, a professor, a head of state, a housekeeper, an equestrian, a prisoner, a student, a mother, a child, a teacher, a nun, a singer, a saint, a whore and a spy in the house of love."

Actress follows her heart back to 'La Reina' revival

BY LUAINA LEE

PASADENA, Calif. — Kate del Castillo was only 6 years old when she decided to become an actress. She and her sister had accompanied their father, actor Eric del Castillo, to the theater in her native Mexico.

"I will never forget. I went with him and he was in a play called 'Salome,' and I remember being backstage with my sister being nosy and mischievous. And I saw this actress preparing backstage in this beautiful costume, and I was overwhelmed," she recalled.

"And then I opened the curtain just a little to see, and I will never forget, the theater was shaped like a horseshoe. It had balconies, and it was full. And I was like, 'Oh, my God, I need to be on this side!'"

Three years later she made her first movie with her father's independent movie cooperative.

"I thought, that's what I wanted to do, but I was too afraid and insecure, which I still am in so many ways," she said.

"(When) I was 15, 16, I told my parents that I really wanted to be an actress and I wanted it to be my life, to be my career."

Her father objected, she said, wanting to protect her from the rejection that actors face. But she was determined.

She starred in a series of telenovelas and became a hot ticket all over Latin America when she portrayed a drug trafficker in the popular "La Reina del Sur" eight years ago. Next Monday she returns to the role airing on Telemundo with English subtitles. It's nine years later since her character disappeared into the witness protection program, and the show picks up where it left off.

EVANS VESTAL WARD/NBC UNIVERSAL

Kate del Castillo returns to her role as a drug trafficker who went into witness protection on "La Reina del Sur."

"I've aged nine years," she said, laughing. "The first season I was pregnant, now I have a 9-year-old kid."

During the interim, del Castillo was pounding out the telenovelas, but she says she grew bored.

"I've always been grateful for the telenovelas because I learned so much and they gave me the name — at least in Mexico," she said. "But I was bored and I think I was a little bit bitter because telenovela actresses and movie actresses, it's like you do one or the other. They didn't want me at all."

So I said, 'I think I'm going to do something else because if nobody's going to hire me to do something that's challenging, then I'd rather quit.'"

But she didn't quit. She headed for Los Angeles, hoping to spike her career there.

"When I got to LA it was really, really tough," she said. "I was by myself. I was divorcing my first husband. I was starting my whole thing from scratch, back to square one. Nobody knew who I was, so it was really hard. And there was a time I didn't work at all. I was studying, studying and running out of money and I was like, 'God, this is so hard. I think I should go back to my comfort zone.' I thought it, but I never did it."

The divorce exacerbated things, she said. "It was a very awful marriage, very violent, abusive and horrible, and I was already well known, so the whole thing came down because I asked for the divorce."

"It's embarrassing when you're going through it, but to make it public is horrible. That's one of the reasons I decided to come here."

After two years she began landing roles in projects such as "Border-town," "Weeds" and "Julia."

Although she often considered it, she never moved back to Mexico. She continues to work here and says the thing lacking in her life is a soul mate.

"I was married twice, I don't want to be married again. I don't believe in marriage. It's been like eight years since I fell in love with someone, and I think it's the right time now. I needed those years. I dated, but nothing serious, nothing that will get into my heart, so I think I'm ready," she said.
